For the accommodation of our customers in the South Division of the city, a branch office of THE TRIBUNE has been established at No. 409 Wabash avenue, in the bookstore of Messrs. THE FIRE LIMITS.

Is the law against the erection of frame buildings to be enforced or not? Are the wooden buildings and sheds erecting in all parts of the West Division going up under permits of the Board of Public Works, or are they put up without permits? It is the duty of every citizen to report to the police and to the Board of Public Works every violation of this most essential law. Immediately south of the High School, in which the courts and records are kept, there have been erected during the last week two monster sheds, each 60x190, and they are used for the storage of coopers' materials. The firing of either of these sheds would produce a conflagration which the fire department could not resist, and would end, perhaps, in the destruction of three-fourths of what is left of the city.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANIES.

A feeble protest has been raised against the cry which has gone forth against our local insurance companies. The protest is to this effect, that if New York had been burned up, all the New York companies would have been bursted; if Boston had been burned, all our Boston companies would have been forced into bankruptcy, and so on, all around the board. What else could be expected of Chicago companies when Chicago burns up?

This may be all true, and yet it constitutes no argument for future business. If we are insured in New York and Boston companies, and New York and Boston burn up, we lose nothing but our premiums—we must reinsure somewhere else. If we burn up, and those cities do not, the chances are that their assets will be invested at home and not here; consequently will not be burned up; consequently they can pay a fair proportion of their losses. Looking at the matter by the light of our own fire, which was sufficiently strong, we are constrained to say that it is not wise for any city to give its insurance very largely to local companies, for when any great fire comes, the property of the insurance companies burns up with the property of the insured, and both go to pot together.

THE SUFFERERS OF THE NORTH.

The TRIBUNE, having reached again its readers in parts distant from Chicago, wishes to lose no time in appealing to their generous sentiments in behalf of the sufferers by the fires in Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota. The calamity of Chicago is more conspicuous than theirs, but it is less severe. Not to mention the fearful loss of life in the tornadoes of flame which devastated those ill-fated sections, carrying away thousands where hundreds went in the Chicago fire, the losses of property and the physical suffering resulting from the terrible visitation have been fearful to contemplate; exceeding by far the suffering caused by any single casualty to any civilized population in modern times. Probably 50,000 people in Northern Wisconsin and Michigan alone have been stripped of every earthly possession by these fires. Half of them have also been rendered sick, or crippled by the ordeal, which will naturally make them objects of charity for some time to come. Unfortunately, too, whole families, whole communities, were engulfed in the common ruin, there are no neighbors or relatives on whom, as in Chicago, the sufferers can fall back for assistance. They can merely flock in masses to the towns unscathed by the flames, there to perish, unless timely aid arrives. This should, for humanity's sake, be prompt and copious. The people of the Northwestern States are already doing much in behalf of the destitute in Wisconsin and Michigan, but the burden should not fall upon them alone. The appeal is to humanity; and we are sorry to say that the [illegible] of the excitement caused by the great Chicago fire will be likely to militate against [illegible] of action in behalf of these other [illegible] all persons able and willing to [illegible] humanity's sake purely, shall [illegible] with special efforts in their [illegible] Money and clothing are the articles [illegible] and the Governors of Wisconsin [illegible] (Madison and Detroit) are [illegible] the most appropriate channels [illegible] this aid can be administered.

THE OIL STONE STORY.

The New York Journal of Commerce has swallowed the oil stone story; and, assuming it as a fact that Chicago was built of stone heavily charged with petroleum, thus describes the process of destruction:

[illegible]

gave evidence of oil. If we mistake not, certain disembodied spirits encouraged the idea, and boring was begun. The oil rock was perforated without getting a drop of oil; but the boring went on until at last they struck a vein of water in no wise tinctured with petroleum. Subsequently a second well was sunk, but the only yield was water. That was the last of the oil theory. The writer in Chambers' Journal has been imposed on. If he would come here and point out the location of that fifty million barrels of oil, he would make a good thing of it.

TWEED'S OPERATIONS.

The disclosures of the New York frauds leave no reasonable doubt that conclusive evidence of the guilt of W. M. Tweed has been obtained. His immediate partners are Ingersoll, Garvey, and one Elbert A. Woodward, Clerk of the Supervisors. Woodward has been residing a long time at Norwalk, Connecticut. During his residence there he has purchased real estate to the amount of $174,000; loaned on mortgage $303,000, and sold real estate for $40,000. The act of 1870 made the Mayor, Comptroller, and present President of the Supervisors a board to audit all outstanding liabilities against the County of New York, and for the amounts found due certificates were to be issued which were to be paid by the Comptroller. The board—Connolly, Hall, & Tweed, had one meeting, and ordered that the certificate of Tweed, or his clerk, J. B. Young, should be sufficient to authorize the Comptroller to pay the claims. Under this arrangement Ingersoll, Garvey, and Woodward, deposited warrants to the amount of $6,312,000, for which they received the money. The transactions of these men were all in one bank, and the whole proceeding is proven by the books in the bank. The warrants were all indorsed by Ingersoll, Garvey, or Woodward. The latter acted throughout for Tweed. When Woodward deposited warrants, he immediately checked against them for Tweed's portion, and Tweed deposited them to his own credit. When Ingersoll and Garvey deposited warrants, they checked a large share to Woodward, who, in turn, checked in favor of Tweed. This was done on twenty-six different days, and as all the checks were drawn upon and deposited in the same bank, the chain of evidence is complete, and the amount received by each distinctly ascertained. The New York Evening Post thus explains the proceeding.

"For a single example, explaining the method of the whole, take the transactions of June 10, 1870. On this day the warrants drawn and paid by the Comptroller were as follows:

Payee.	Endorser.	Amount.
C. D. Bollar	Ingersoll & Co	$57,687.35
Ingersoll & Co.	Ingersoll & Co.	82,719.10
George S. Miller	Ingersoll & Co	41,474.30
A. J. Garvey	Andrew J. Garvey	41,339.50
A. J. Garvey	Andrew J. Garvey	25,639.30
A. J. Garvey	Andrew J. Garvey	41,160.85
J. W. Smith	J. W. Smith	18,193.32
Keyser & Co	K. & Co	36,833.90
J. McB. Davidson	J. McB. Davidson	66,495.89

"These warrants were collected as follows: James H. Ingersoll collected the first three, amounting to $181,880.81; Andrew J. Garvey collected the next three, amounting to $108,979.15; E. A. Woodward collected the rest, amounting to $121,870.01. Each of these men deposited the official checks in the Broadway Bank to his own credit, and then drew against them. Ingersoll at once drew a check for $65,270.94, and deposited it to the credit of E. A. Woodward. Garvey drew a check for $71,552.12, and deposited it to the credit of Woodward. Woodward then, having in hand the sum of $278,893.27 out of the whole set of warrants, drew his check for $66,513.28, and deposited it to the credit of William M. Tweed. In the same way the fraudulent conspiracy was carried out on every day on which any of these warrants were paid. And in the same way, when the New York Printing Company, on June 7, 1870, three days earlier, collected fraudulent warrants of the same class to the amount of $251,376.12, the company at once gave its check to William M. Tweed for $103,338.64, which he deposited to his own credit the next day."

Woodward received $3,500,000 in all, against which he checked for over one million to Tweed, and these checks Tweed deposited to his own credit in the bank.

A Stockholder in the Republic Insurance Company, residing at Logansport, Ind., writes to us, complaining against the demand made by the policy-holders that the stockholders pay up their stock notes, and go on with their business according to law; and he wants to know how the other Chicago companies are to be treated. He also thinks it is hard if the poor stockholders in the Republic, after losing all they have paid in, are to be the only sufferers by the fire who get no benefit from the munificent donations poured into Chicago from other places.

In regard to the latter point, we would remark that the charity contributions are not intended to set anybody up in business, or to make good anybody's losses, or to suspend the operations of law, but simply to prevent suffering from hunger, cold, and sickness. If any of the stockholders of the Republic Insurance Company are suffering from lack of food or shelter, they have only to make their wants known to the Relief Society, in order to be taken care of until they can do something better, but the Relief Society does not intend to set apart any of its funds to provide merchants with new stocks of goods, or newspapers with new type and presses, or lawyers with new libraries, or insurance companies with new assets.

We understand that all Chicago insurance companies, whose assets consist in part of stock notes, are to be treated in the same way as the Republic—that is, the law is to be executed by the State Auditor with entire impartiality. If a merchant with outstanding notes to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars has lost all his property except the small amount he can recover from his insurance, he must either go into bankruptcy or get an extension from his creditors. The same rule must apply to stockholders in insurance companies.

The unseemly contest between South Side and West Side, between the burnt district and the unburnt districts, has died out. Our ears are no longer assailed with the clamors of raging speculators in real estate striving to collect a few dollars from the wreck of other people's millions. The fact is now apparent, as we stated it immediately after the fire, that the burnt district will be gradually rebuilt in the same general way as before, and that, as fast as it is rebuilt, the old lines of business will return to it, for the single reason that they can be better accommodated there than elsewhere. In order to secure the permanent retention of this class of business in the unburnt districts, it would be necessary to have another great fire to make room for the class of buildings which this business requires. The present locations must perforce continue till something better is offered. The better ones will be found in the burnt district a few years hence. They cannot be found elsewhere, unless the present ones are demolished and commodious buildings erected in their stead.

The officers of the Bricklayers' Union assert that that body has taken no action in regard to wages of journeymen, and that the advance in wages has been owing, not to the demands of the men, but to the competing bids of employers. The latter have not hesitated to offer journeymen an advance of wages if they would leave their former employers and work for them. The same officers indignantly deny that any printed or written notice has been sent to other cities, warning bricklayers against coming here.

The union deserves special thanks of all Chicago for resisting all appeals to strike for an arbitrary rate of wages, and for their good sense in leaving wages to regulate itself by the demand.

The Cincinnati insurance companies lose in the aggregate $1,500,000 by the Chicago fire, and all propose to pay in full. This is creditable to Cincinnati, whose citizens subscribed $500,000 to enable one of the companies to pay its losses, without impairing its capital.

Did He Escape?

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

SIR: I have just been informed of the following incident: On Monday morning, 9th inst., at about 4 o'clock, the brick block southeast corner of Congress and Wabash avenue was destroyed. The third house was blown up in order to save the balance of the block. A short time before this occurred, two boys went through the building, and in a second story back room they discovered, lying on the floor, a [illegible] young man who had fallen exhausted in the act of carrying out a heavy piece of furniture. He was about 6 feet high, [illegible] black hair and mustache, and was in his shirt sleeves. [illegible] house was destroyed. Respectfully, &c.,

THOS. WILSON.

Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

DANVILLE, Ill., Oct. [illegible]

The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance has just concluded its annual session, which commenced on Tuesday last, in this city. This Grand Body was much embarrassed in its labors by the destruction of its documents, records, &c., in the Chicago fire. These were all placed in the hands of the Grand Scribe, G. N. Jones, publisher of the National Prohibitionist. When his office was burned in Chicago, the archives of the Grand Division were also destroyed by the devouring element. [illegible]

[illegible] ensuing year. All was harmony and peace throughout every session. Public meetings were held every night in the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was crowded to its utmost capacity by the citizens of [illegible]. Speeches were made by Dr. W. Ross, [illegible] Stoughton, M. H. Pogson, D. Teed, Mr. De Geer, Mrs. Jones, and others. The following is a list of the officers elected for the ensuing year:

Grand Worthy Patriarch, Dr. Wm. Ross, Dover.
Grand Worthy Associate, Mrs. M. E. De Geer, Chicago.
Grand Worthy Scribe, G. N. Jones, Chicago.
Grand Worthy Treasurer, Thomas Hoalding, Chicago.
Grand Worthy Conductor, H. O. Brower, Danville.
Grand Worthy Sentinel, J. N. Tate, Grand View.
Grand Worthy Chaplain, J. E. McClain, Urbana.
Past Grand Worthy Patriarch, M. H. Pogson, Bloomington.

Personal.

The Cincinnati Enquirer mentions the producer of a recent "Fire Poem" in terms as follows: "Mr. Francis Bret Harte, the literary mushroom, has written a brief, but classic, poem upon the destruction of Chicago. The poem is worth about eight dollars. Mr. Harte had a grudge against Chicago, growing out of that dinner and the slighted wife. The account is now square."

—The Rev. O. H. Tiffany, formerly and for many years pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church in this city, and now pastor of St. Paul's Church, Newark, New Jersey, upon hearing of the disaster in Chicago, undertook to organize relief. The collections taken up at [illegible] in cash. In addition to this the ladies made a [illegible] contribution of clothing [illegible] congregation amounting to $600, making a grand total of [illegible] for Dr. Tiffany's Church. Mr. Tiffany is now in Chicago to distribute the results of her husband's labors.

—Captain Sam. E. Gross has received six large boxes of clothing and one box of shoes for ladies and children's wear, sent to him for distribution among the sufferers of the fire, by the Ladies' Relief Committee of Philadelphia. [illegible]

—The Louisville Commercial speaks in the following complimentary terms of a Chicago lady: "In our notice, yesterday, of the lecture, 'Through Flame and Fire,' to be given by Mrs. Agnes Leonard Scanlan, in this her native city, it should have read Masonic Temple, instead of Weisiger Hall. A correspondent in Chicago describes this lecture as 'the most perfect piece of word-painting I have ever seen.' [illegible] The tragedy which has darkened her life, the misfortune which has been brought upon her, her reputation as a noble woman and poet, and her wide acquaintance in Louisville, should insure her a warm and generous reception on her first appearance in the lecture field."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 28.—By the President of the United States:

A PROCLAMATION.

A bounteous season has again enabled the husbandmen to garner the fruits of successful toil. Industry has been generally well rewarded. We are at peace with all nations; tranquility with few exceptions prevails at home. Within the past year we have in the main been free from the ills which elsewhere have afflicted our kind. If some of us have had calamities, there should be occasion for sympathy with the sufferers, resignation on their part to the will of the Most High, and rejoicing by the many who have been more favored. I, therefore, recommend that Thursday, the 30th day of November next, the people meet in their respective places of worship, there to make the usual acknowledgments to Almighty God for the blessings He has conferred upon them, [illegible]

WONDERFUL REPORT SINCE THE GREAT FIRE! OF Cures Performed at Dr. FRITZ'S MEDICAL & SURGICAL OFFICE, No. 258 South Halsted-st., near Adams.

Two weeks more have passed on since the well-known INDIAN DOCTOR positively demonstrated to the public that Roots, Herbs, and Barks, prescribed according to Nature's own laws, have the power to cure all forms of Chronic Disease, as hundreds can testify. The many cures performed at Dr. Fritz's Medical and Surgical office are truly great, and yet the public need not be astonished, for God and Nature have planted around us the remedials of cure, which, if properly understood, never fail to relieve suffering humanity.

By permission, we give the names of a few of many who reported themselves cured during the past two weeks: Fred. Ecks, Michigan City, of fever sore; J. Plymouth, West Side, throat consumption; James Gilligan, Michigan, cured of deafness of twenty years' standing; James Howard, dyspepsia and piles; Mrs. A. Miligan, Hinsdale, liver complaint; Mrs. J. Stallard, rheumatism, Wabash avenue; John O'Neal, blindness, North Side; Eli Bland, hay fever, Calumet; one amputation of hand; removal of tumor on left side; one cancer of neck, and a great number, whose names we have not space to mention, who report themselves cured.

During the last two weeks, we prescribed for 265 patients of both sexes and all nationalities, showing conclusively that Dr. Fritz practices a system of medicine which does not fail to cure chronic disease when faithfully obeyed.

Certificates of cure are invaluable to those who are about to consult a physician; by them the true physician may be known. We have given to the public over 500 names of persons cured since we opened our office in Chicago.

Dr. Fritz can be consulted daily at his office, 258 South Halsted-st., from 9 a. m. to 12 m., from 2 till 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

A FEARFUL TROTTING MATCH.

A Race with the Fire Fiend—How Fred Blackmar saved Brown Kittie.

Chicago, Ill., October 22.—On the morning of that terrible Monday, when one-third of the Garden City went down in a maelstrom of fire and flame, there occurred one of the strangest, and probably most fearful, trotting races on record. It was a race wherein the fire fiend and the storm king went in double harness, with Death for a driver, against Mr. Fred Blackmar and his brown mare Kittie. It was a single dash of less than a mile, contested with all the fierceness of ate on one side and only a hope of salvation on the other.

A Moonlight Stroll Through the Shades of Chicago.

Rapid Disappearance of the Poetry and Romance of Our Ruins.

It is Material Destruction, and Nothing More, that One Views.

The Toppling Walls and Ruined Piles Giving Way to Prosaic Men.

It is only three weeks since the fire, impelled by the stormy southwest wind, swept across our city, leaving behind it the blackest desolation and the completest destruction, and more fully obliterating all traces of the busy men who for years have toiled and striven there, and who, anticipating their future, had piled stone upon stone, and filled their completed piles with the products of the world, than the red flames that blotted out Nineveh, or the sword of the Assyrian or Roman when he devastated conquered Jerusalem. And yet so little regard have we for the past, and so constantly do we turn our thoughts to the future, that the very appearance of those ruins, which we gazed at so sorrowfully a wonderfully twenty days ago, will soon be effaced from our minds, and we will forget that this new city, in this new country, has had ruins, as well as Italy or the East, though ours were once the homes of merchant princes, and theirs of Emperors and barbaric Kings. At present we have stereoscopic views of shattered walls and fire-eaten stones, and little boys have spread out on planks, placed upon trestles, or carry about in their hands, relics of the conflagration. Poking among the ashes, they have raked out melted insulators, broken crockery, singed china dolls, and half-fused oyster shells, which will figure upon mantel-pieces by the side of fragments of stone from Melrose Abbey, or mosaics from the floors of Roman palaces, or pieces of shells that burst within the walls of beleaguered Paris. But this trade, the happy inspiration of some smart boy, will cease in a few days, for it is generally only strangers who buy these things. So many men here have ruins of their own, and cellars full of private relics, that they do not care to buy. A man who has an insurance policy in a Chicago Company has a memento for which he has paid quite enough, and which is as intrinsically valueless as any relic can be. He can have it framed and hung on his walls as an illustration of the vanity of human hopes, and the mistaken meanings which dictionaries give the word "Insurance." But the truth is, we are unable to see anything praiseworthy in a tumble-down structure, and would give one marble front for all the ruined castles in Europe, and, having stared at our ruins for a day, we set to work to clear them away.

It would be a pity, were they to pass so quickly into oblivion, since to us, who lived here, they were so wonderfully suggestive, and we could spend days in studying them. They were filled with fresh and living associations. While those in other lands write only vague memories of a busy past, ours brought up no recollection of baronial halls, of predatory lords, historic names and princely revels, but they were linked directly with the life we had been living. They were not moss-covered and ivy-mantled, but green and crude. There is much in Pompeii that brings us in contact with the every-day life of the people, but Pompeii is no more a ruin than a mummy is a skeleton, and our city did resemble a skeleton which lacked quite a number of bones and would require a deal of restoration before it could be properly mounted. Here we had the perfection of latter-day desolation, and had they been let alone for a year, nothing could have surpassed them. They would have been as interesting as a ruined city of Yucatan.

But when we go now in the daytime through the burnt district, we find that the infinite possibilities for romance and poetry which the place presented, are rapidly disappearing. They are spoiling our ruins, and it is not time that is mellowing and adorning, even while destroying them, but it is prosaic and matter-of-fact men. In among these ruined piles, and at the feet of these toppling walls, pine shanties are springing up, imitating in name only, the edifices that preceded them. It is a Western settlement going up among the ruins of Tadmor; a gipsy encampment beside some decaying English castle. Hundreds of men are picking up, cleaning and piling brick. Owners and architects talk hopefully of what is standing. Women and boys, with sacks on their shoulders, are picking out scraps of old iron, or bits of half burned paper and cloth. Full street cars are running back and forth. Pelican men walk slowly on their beats. All is life and activity. And if a person, desirous of reaching a contemplative frame of mind, and of working himself up to a proper pitch to write the history of the wreck of the imperial city, seats himself on a pile of bricks in some quiet corner, the keen influence of a west wind sets him to the fact that the flames yet smoulder, and he walks off, with his hands behind him. On the North Side, German men, women, and children, who cannot for a minute endure the thought of abandoning the land that is theirs, are chattering and screaming, and working away at the shanties they are putting up. It is only near the ruined churches that there is peace and quiet. There the silence is unbroken, except when some wandering stranger stops for a moment to look curiously at the shattered walls, the empty windows, and the broken arches, or when some woman, who had once worshipped there, came to look tearfully at the place where she had so often knelt, and where she had gone home, her heart full of emotion, and her eyes full of new bonnets.

In the centre of all this life and activity, it is impossible to reflect on the disaster, or to behave as people are expected to do when brought face to face with ruins. We expect of them that they should be older than we, while here they are mere creatures of the preceding day, and we have abode here for years. What do you care for a bald piece of rockwork in your neighbor's yard, or the grotto that used to exist in Lincoln Park, but which is now happily burned out? What magic spell could there be upon them? And yet these ruins are fearfully suggestive in their way. Where now lies a shapeless pile of brick and stone, was once the store at which our wives and daughters were accustomed to trade. Thence came the fabrics that delighted them, and the bills that disconcerted us. But where now are the clerks that snubbed us, and informed us that no gentleman would wear the particular article for which we were asking, and where are the errand boys who were so long in coming with our scanty change? And yet from these very ashes, and those still buried safes, unsettled accounts may arise to plague us, for fire cannot always destroy debts, nor water wash them away. It is only when one is safely inearthed at Graceland or Rosehill that he is free from molestation. Then no creditor knocks at his tombstone and says, "Is Mr. H. in? I have a little bill I should like him to settle;" and, were he to do it, be sure that the debtor would not open to him, but would only say, "Mr. H. is taking a nap for a few thousand years, and he cannot be disturbed."

That fragmentary wall, that broken window, are all that remain of the grocery store where we were accustomed to deal; but what a difference from the well-ordered shelves and the overflowing baskets. The imported goods have been dissolved in smoke. The wines have been drunk up by the fire without stupefying it. English pickles, French sardines, American oysters and preserves, have met a common fate. The rare products of sea and shore, the delight of thousands, have disappeared forever, swallowed up at once, and yet this conflagration, more voracious than an ostrich, never got the dyspepsia from them.

There dwelt the tailor, who was engrossed with our overcoat when the flames caught him. Where is he gone, or what has become of him, who knows. A tailor is a domestic animal, who hates to abandon the spot where he had established his artistic temple. He may have perished in trying to save his patterns, and at the midnight hour his visionary form may be seen cutting shadowy cloth with phantom shears, and observing in ghostly tones, "A very gentlemanly garment indeed, and a most stylish fit." But this is no town for tailors now. All wear old clothes—some from necessity, and others to affect a sympathy with the disaster. When our friends die we wear black; when their fortunes melt, we wear shabby raiment. It is economical and becoming. When our wives die we marry again. Thus do people bear, when called upon to sustain great calamities. Yes, the tailor is gone; but we will run across him at the Day of Judgment, and he will apologize for the delay, and promise to send the garment around next week, just as if he were still on earth.

If the city were three weeks younger than it is, tonight there would be theatres which we might have visited. They are had many scenery [illegible] but never [illegible] equal this. Nature [illegible] sensational drama [illegible] that the underst[illegible] is a burning ship to [illegible] crew of five to the [illegible] from destruction [illegible] four theatres united, to [illegible] produce even a fraction [illegible] have lost their jests [illegible] the disaster with the [illegible] who had hitherto been [illegible] looked mostly upon [illegible] Were it not for the fear [illegible] be tempted
